

Six Impossible Things Before Breakfast (and maybe more)

In Alice In Wonderland, Alice says to the Queen, "there is no use in trying, one can't believe in impossible things." The Queen responds, "I daresay you haven't had much practice. When I was younger, I always did it for half an hour a day. Why sometimes, I've believed in as many as six impossible things before breakfast."

When Wendy Morton decided to believe in impossible things, the world opened up for her, and she took to heart Mary Oliver's wonderful question, from her poem The Summer Day.

Tell me, what is it you plan to do / with your one wild and precious life?

Wendy has relentlessly taken poetry out of bookstores and coffee shops, out onto the street and even into the air! She brings corporate sponsors, poets and audiences together in new ways and has been sponsored by WestJet Airlines, Chrysler, Prairie Naturals Vitamins, Fujifilm, Fairmont Hotels, AbeBooks, and Green Beaver skin care products. She has published five books of poetry, and a memoir. She believes in the impossible and encourages dreamers of all sorts to make positive change based on flights of fancy.

This workshop is designed to show writers and non-writers alike how they can turn their dreams for their lives into reality, how to promote their writing, their ideas, their gifts to the world.

"Wendy Morton's enthusiasm and wide-open view of the world was contagious. Her playfulness and success inspired me, and her ability to teach set me at ease. In just a few hours I found myself stepping out, beyond constraints ... poetry in life, indeed!" (FORMER PARTICIPANT)

Wendy Morton's workshop on possibilities will nudge dreams out of the deepest places within. She is an engaging spirit and storyteller out to prove we are the only barriers to our creativity and ideas. Her poetry already speaks and the opportunity to spend time with her will have you singing and reaching for the stars.
